KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION. William Moyle Instantly Killed in the Red Rose Mine.

Mammoth, Juab Co., Jan. 31 .- William Moyle, a miner, at the Red Rose, was killed and his body torn to pieces by an explosion which took place at about 5 o'clock last evening. Four men were at work in the bottom of the shaft during the day and when the round of thirteen "burley holes" had been put in, and were ready for firing two of the men went to the level above, leaving Moyle and his partner to touch off the fuse. Moyle and his partner, William Hodges, then began lighting the fuse and as soon as this work had been completed Hodges began ascending to the skip which was stationed about eighteen feet up the shaft, and in readiness to convey them to the surface before the shots would go off. Hodges reached the skip in safety but Moyle, after covering the greater portion of the distance, for some unknown reason said: "I'm gone," and slid to the bottom of the shaft. The man working with him threw him the rope again and shouted to him to eatch hold whill pudled him up. This Moyle did, but be-

Another attempt was made to rescue Moyle from what was known to be certain death but to no avail and the men who were trying to save him knew that to remain below longer meant death to all, they gave the signal to be hoisted and left Moyle in the mine. The men were only part way up the shaft when the explosion occurred and as soon as possible all went back to learn the awful fate of their fellow workman who had been killed instantly and his body lay among the rocks in the shaft. Moyle, who was a native of Cornwall, England, was unmarried and about 26 years of age. The nearest relative of the deceased is a brother living in California.
